What is Passover?

Passover commemorates and celebrates the historical and biblical Exodus of the Hebrew slaves from Egyptian slavery. Also, occurring at the beginning of spring, Passover is an important holiday celebrating rebirth, renewal, and redemption.

After about 400 years in slavery, with forced work, hard labor and bitter lives, God called Moses to lead the Children of Israel out. When permitted to leave, the Israelites departed so quickly (lest Pharaoh change his mind) that their bread had no time to rise and was baked flat, unleavened bread called matzah.

Each and every year, Jews remember and recount the story of Exodus. The goal is to feel as if each person was personally redeemed from Egypt. The Exodus from Egypt is the central event in the identity of the Jewish People which changed them from being a band of slaves into a cohesive group.

Why Special Food?

Because the freed Hebrews only ate matzah, for the entire holiday of Passover (seven or eight days) Jews eat matzah and refrain from all leaven-anything that rises during baking. The rabbis specify five grains that are absolutely forbidden on Passover: Wheat, oat, spelt, barley and rye. In addition, many rabbis prohibit rice and legumes (such as peas, beans, corn, lentils, millet, and mustard) because they expand when cooked.

In trying to personalize the redemptive message of the Exodus, adopting special dietary practice allows a constant, deliberate (and not always easy) way to remember the messages of Passover. When we were freed, the Jews had only matzah to eat so we too eat only matzah. And, by limiting our diet on Passover, it is a reminder of the joy of freedom we experience throughout the rest of the year.
